Continuing the Boston Symphony Orchestra’s survey of the Stalin-era works of Dmitri Shostakovich, Music Director Andris Nelsons leads the orchestra in four performances Thursday, March 24-Tuesday, March 29, featuring the composer’s massive, wartime Eighth Symphony. The American premiere of Georgian composer Giya Kancheli’s Dixi for chorus and orchestra, featuring the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, opens the program. In between is Rachmaninoff’s perennially popular Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini, written only a decade before Shostakovich’s symphony. Russian virtuoso pianist Nikolai Lugansky is featured as soloist in the virtuosic and lyrical showpiece.

On the program for Tuesday, March 29, Shostakovich’s suite from the incidental music to Hamlet replaces Rachmaninoff’s Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini.
PROGRAM DETAILS
Georgian-born Giya Kancheli remained primarily in Tbilisi until the fall of the Soviet Union in 1991—at which point he moved to Western Europe—but has developed a significant worldwide reputation. His personal style draws strongly on the music of the Christian Orthodox church, and Dixi (2009) is a 22-minute work for chorus and orchestra setting fragments of Latin text, which are assembled in loose order with no apparent connection to each other. These performances will be the BSO’s first of music by Kancheli, one of the most significant composers of the post-Shostakovich era in the former Soviet region.

Defined on one level by the composer’s combination of beautifully lyrical melodic writing with inventive, sometimes jazzy sense of rhythm and harmony, Rachmaninoff’s ever-popular Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini also demonstrates the composer’s deft control of formal architecture. In scope, scale, and virtuosity the equal of a traditional piano concerto, the Rhapsody is a massive set of 24 variations on the 24th and final of Paganini’s Caprices for solo violin. The celebrated eighteenth variation, which flips Paganini’s famous tune, is arguably Rachmaninoff’s best-known passage.

Composed in a short period of time in the summer of 1943, Shostakovich’s Eighth Symphony, like most all of the composer’s music, has endured multiple impassioned and conflicting claims as to its “meaning.” Emerging just half a year after the Soviets’ hard-won victory over the Nazis at Stalingrad, many believed that pivotal battle to be the subject of the work, its downtrodden, mournful tone an elegy for the fallen. In Shostakovich’s secondhand memoir—which is of disputed legitimacy—the composer indicates that the piece is as much about the Russian people’s suffering at the hands of the Soviet government as it is about the war with the Russians. Either way, it is powerful, shattering music, embodying Shostakovich’s unparalleled ability to capture the bleakness, anger, and despair of a people oppressed, exploited, and killed off by assailants foreign and domestic.

Shostakovich’s incidental music to Hamlet (performed March 29 only) was written for a satirical, avant-garde production of Hamlet, directed by Nikolai Akimov, which distorted the motivations and worthiness of the play's characters. The orchestral suite is fashioned from fifteen “numbers” written for the show (of which seven will be performed in this concert), and represents the last gasp of the irrepressible, experimental spirit of the early Soviet cultural scene in 1932 before Stalin began to tighten his hold on artists of all kinds.

EDUCATIONAL INITIATIVES AT SYMPHONY HALL
As part of the BSO’s ongoing initiative to enhance its patrons’ awareness and knowledge of the music being performed, the Boston Symphony Orchestra continues to offer a variety of adult education initiatives at Symphony Hall for the 2015-16 season.

This season will introduce “Casual Fridays,” encouraging both patrons and the orchestra to come dressed in comfortable clothing. The three evening “Casual Friday” concerts in January, February, and March are priced from $25-$45 and will feature both a pre-concert reception and post-concert reception with live music until midnight. In addition, a limited number of iPads will be distributed to concert-goers with pre-loaded content related to the evening’s performance including music scores, program notes, and guest artist information.

“BSO 101: Are You Listening?” returns in 2015-16. In this popular Wednesday-evening series, BSO Director of Program Publications Marc Mandel is joined by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for presentations designed to enhance one’s listening abilities and general appreciation of music by focusing on works from the BSO’s repertoire. No prior musical training, or attendance at any previous session, is required, since each session is self-contained. Each of these “BSO 101” sessions takes place from 5:30-6:45 p.m., and each is followed by a free guided tour of Symphony Hall, as well as a reception offering beverages, hors d’oeuvres, and further time to share thoughts with other attendees. Though the “BSO 101” sessions are free, please note that there is a nominal charge for the reception. Full details of the 2015-16 “BSO 101” schedule will be announced at a later date.

The popular Friday Preview Talks continue to take place from 12:15-12:45 p.m. before each Friday-afternoon subscription concert; the Symphony Hall doors open at 11:30 a.m. Given by BSO Director of Program Publications Marc Mandel, Assistant Director of Program Publications Robert Kirzinger, and occasional guest speakers, these informative half-hour talks incorporate recorded examples from the music to be performed. The BSO also offers talks before each of the season’s four Thursday-morning Open Rehearsals at Symphony Hall. These take place from 9:30-10 a.m. The Symphony Hall doors open at 9 a.m., and the Open Rehearsal itself begins at 10:30 a.m. Admission to the Friday Preview Talks and Open Rehearsal Talks is free of charge free to ticket holders for the Friday-afternoon subscription concerts and Thursday-morning Open Rehearsals.
